8	OBJECTIVES OF THE SEMINAR	This seminar is intended to introduce the audience to the various dimensions of Literary Theory and chart the evolution of theoretical approaches to Literature from the age of Plato to that of Post Modernism. Dealing with Research studies or Methodology requires a basic knowledge about Theory as a discipline. This seminar is also meant to be of use to those students of Literature who have crossed the beginner level but are looking forward to honing their ideas further. The target audience consists mainly of the students of the department of English. However, students and teachers from other departments would also benefit from this seminar as it would grant them inroads into multi-disciplinary research and transdisciplinary scope of further studies. The resource person shall be requested to deliver the talk bilingually so that it is convenient for the students. The flyer shall be circulated at both the college level and beyond so that students and faculty members from across departments and institutions may be able to attend the seminar according to their need and convenience.
9	OUTCOME OF THE SEMINAR	The seminar was extremely successful at engaging the audience which comprised different students and faculty members from the college and beyond. There was an interactive session at the end of the seminar which helped clear various doubts of the students and also generated other discussions which were allied to contemporary areas of research in English Literature, Sociology, Political Science and Comparative Literature. In fact it was difficult to bring the session to a halt even after it having continued for an hour over the scheduled slot. There were multiple requests to convert this seminar into a lecture series based on the topic of Literary Theory taking up more detailed aspects in each session with more panellists. The department shall discuss this further to reach a consensus regarding the above suggestions.

CONCEPT NOTE

Subaltern studies can be traced back to the 1980s which progressively took a broader and more productive approach in representing the movement of the oppressed sections through the bottom-up contributions to Indian history. (Pys,2019). The objective of this webinar is to delve into that arena to help us attain a deeper understanding of the perspective of the 'other' and effectively expand our vision by interrogating the essentialised bipolar constructions of social identities in contemporary India. In recent times, the main challenge is the structuring of power relations and addressing the plural forms of marginalization that are produced in the context of contemporary India. (Nison& Roy, 2015). Faced with multiple grave crises within a single span of time, it is becoming increasingly necessary to locate alternate sources of history and hitherto ignored or negated structures of knowledge to move beyond the monolithic and conventional forms of language and social agreement. The portrayal of Dalit struggles in Literature and the relevance of dalit politics in contemporary India are some of the areas that should be intervened with the intersectionality of class, gender, sexuality and ability. Today identity politics, especially with the rising caste based violence across the country, is a special area of concern that has grabbed the attention of students, scholars, social scientists and policy makers in India and worldwide. In this webinar, we shall try to move into those spaces of culture, politics, society and literature where schisms can be forged, how and when those schisms can be or need to be moderated, the problems which inevitably arise when the status quo is disturbed and the strategies and methodologies we need to envision and execute to bring about a larger change in the way life and knowledge is experienced.

CONCEPT NOTE

From December 2019, the general lexicon has incorporated a new term and hence the medical world has been introduced to a fierce form of an otherwise benign disease, while the globe has been introduced to a new fear psychosis in the form of Corona virus and the resultant disease named COVID-19. It is not the first time that world has plunged into a dark phase of medical history since a structural similarity can be discerned between the Corona virus and the virus that causes Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS) - the outbreak of the latter took place twice in the year 2002 and freshly again in 2003. Apart from that, the world has also encountered the Ebola virus, the effect of which has remained concentrated mainly in the African countries. However, the deadly impact of the corona virus has been unprecedented - forcing people on a global scale to be sequestered in order to be safe has never been witnessed in the recent history. It has resulted in the categorical debunking of the statement that 'Man is a social animal' by introducing measures like 'social distancing' in everyday activities. This fight against such a belligerent adversary can be equated with a war for saving humanity and is nothing short of a Science Fiction movie gaining a real life of its own. We have been confounded beyond our abilities and are succumbing to a rising desperation and despondency. As assiduously explained by Beck, in modern society 'risk' knows no bound (Beck 1992) and later extended by Giddens, who categorized risk into external risk and manufactured risk, the latter ensconces a high degree of human agency in producing and spreading the risk. Nonetheless, the serious effect of social distancing and an extended quarantine is mostly psychological. Our psychological needs and the capacity to perceive things are undergoing drastic transformations in this imposed situation. The traditionally structured ways of going about our lives calls for a re-evaluation and restructuring in a world where we are being compelled to unlearn and relearn on a daily basis. This also includes the modes of communication and most certainly the method of teaching and learning in this pandemic era. In this Webinar we will try to understand the ways of normalizing 'the new normal' and the challenges we will face in this journey as we grapple with making a new sense of the world around us. We will try to focus on the way the paradox of needing emotional empathy and the ineluctable necessity of maintaining 'social distance' can be approached; and most importantly how these two can be coalesced to ensure mental health during this trying time.

9	OUTCOME OF THE SEMINAR	The response was overwhelming right from the time the registration was opened. Different students and faculty members from the college and beyond attended the webinar. We were even able to record all the three lectures of the panel via our college GSuite account and we plan to stream it later on a college YouTube Channel or Facebook page. There was an interactive session at the end of each of the respective lectures which, nevertheless, wasn't enough to satisfy the endless curiosity of the participants and the students of the college in particular, as the topic opened up a panorama of research opportunities apart from just piquing the general interest of thinking minds. It has been decided that certificates shall only be provided to those participants who submit the hard copy of the feedback form on the next working day as declared by the college in accordance with the regulations of the Higher Education Department of West Bengal and Vidyasagar University.

It would be a great privilege to have you with us, sharing your knowledge and expertise with us regarding the condition of women amidst the Covid-19 pandemic that has affected men and women differently. We are looking forward to being sensitized about the ways in which the onset of the Covid-19 pandemic has also facilitated an unprecedented increase in domestic violence across the globe.

We would be highly obliged if you grace the occasion as the first speaker for the day long webinar. We would also be expecting a short interactive session of 15 minutes after your presentation where we would take questions from participants for you to address. Keeping in mind the fact that the students of our college are comfortable speaking in Bengali, we would request you to keep your address bilingual as far as possible. We would like to humbly request for an acceptance mail from your end which would contain the specific topic of your lecture/presentation, a short bio which would help our participants know you better and a small photograph which we would like to use in our flyer.

It would be a matter of great privilege for us if you kindly consent to the above and support us in this endeavour.

Thanking you in anticipation.

Concept Note

The outbreak of Covid-19 pandemic as a global health crisis has wreaked havoc on all walks of life. Its adverse impacts have been felt in the public sectors of economy and politics as much as the domestic realm of lives of people across the globe. While the slowing down of economy and the collapse of the already overburdened public healthcare systems in countries such as India are the direct consequences of the pandemic, the unforeseen/indirect consequences are what require scholarly attention. The academic discourse is rife with the discussions on mental health crisis posed in the wake of the pandemic. Nevertheless, the degree to which its impact is felt is circumscribed by the intersections of various social markers such as caste, gender, age, race, class, and religion. Contrary to the popular belief that the pandemic is a great leveller, it has sharpened the existing inequalities along the lines of income, age, and gender. This webinar addresses the manifold impacts of Covid-19 pandemic on women who are oppressed to a greater extent under the patriarchal structure than men. The responsibilities of child rearing and household chores are now disproportionately upon women, particularly with the social support systems not in place. The National Commission for Women reports in March 2020 that domestic violence cases across states have more than doubled since the lockdown. Under the 'new-normal' circumstances, the coping mechanism in social life and practices necessitates physical and social distancing imperatives, shooting up unemployment figures across all the sectors. Commercial sex work is among the many professions that have been affected by the social-distancing practices. Further, the crisis has intensified the difficulties of parents with special children. Negotiating with parenting, mothers are relentlessly struggling to carve an identity akin to normality and navigating the challenges caused by the psycho-social burdens of adapting to the 'new-normal' situations. The national webinar will address the ontology of women's experiences and the trajectories of their turmoil through diverse epistemologies. The effort will be to contribute to the corpus of knowledge in a Covid-infected world drawing on the lens of gender studies.

Certificates (in hard copy) will be provided only upon the submission of feedback forms as and when the college reopens following Government regulations.

10	OUTCOME OF THE SEMINAR	The response was overwhelming from the circulation of the flyer from multiple institutions all over the country. Different students and faculty members from the college and beyond attended the webinar. We were even able to record all the four lectures of the panel via our college GSuite account and we plan to stream it later on a college YouTube Channel or Facebook page. There was an interactive session at the end of the session for which 30 minutes was allotted which nevertheless wasn't enough to satisfy the endless curiosity of the participants and the students of the college in particular, as the topic combines two extremely fervent areas of concern at this point of time. It has been decided that certificates shall only be provided to those participants who submit the hard copy of the feedback form on the next working day as declared by the college in accordance with the regulations of the Higher Education Department of West Bengal and Vidyasagar University.

10. Objectives of the Seminar: States, even today in the era of globalization, acquire centre stage as units of global relations. No state is an island and hence relations between or among them, either positive or negative, is a natural result. Kautilya's Mandala theory provides an interesting insight into the dynamics and myriad components of inter-state relations and has been quite popular among students of Sanskrit and Political Science. The department hence decided to have a detailed discussion on the theme. The main purpose of the seminar was to illuminate the students about the model of relations between and among twelve kings as elaborated by Kautilya. The positioning of the kings in relation to one another in the structure, determining the nature of their relations intrigued the students. The esteemed speaker also discussed the various modes of conducting war and diplomacy. The most important focus of the seminar was to explore the contemporary applications of such age-old ideas. Realism as a theoretical school has always been attractive to the students. Ideas like non-permanence of friends or foes in inter -state relations and detachment of ethics from politics invited reactions and comments from students, successfully making this an engaging, interactive session even via online platform.
11. Outcome of the Seminar: The seminar was a success as it made the students introspect about how the theory of Rajamandala is applicable in the current day scenario. It helped in the broadening of perspective among the students related to the understanding of the evolution of politics in the Indian society. It will further help them to apprehend global politics using the Indian political Rajamandala theory.
